Girl Flogging. The London Truth brings out a story which has created a considerable sensation about 'Mrs Walter Smith, the girl flogger." Eoglish people are proverbially more stern and Severe in the management of children than Americans. English mothers whip their daughters up to an age of the girls which is simply unheard of across the water. Birch in the bondoir is a common thing, and it is invariably applied to that part of the body which i associated in the United States with the term "spanking." Nevertheless the revelation has somewhat astonished the generality of people that there exists at least one regular whipping booth where girls are birched at a fixed sum per whipping. Girls, it seems, are flogged there, to for physical and mental diseases, and the whole idea of birching girls is brought down to a science. Unquestionably there are many other institutions of the like character. Mr. Labouchere denounces Mrs. Smith's and calls for institution as a public outrage, and calls for its suppression by the authorities. It is impossible to read his article without thinking that he hints at infinitely graver crimes than those he declares. The article in than those he declares. The article in Truth in substance, is as follows:

"Some month-ago I called attention to the advertisements on the part of a woman, offering to flog unruly girls of any age on payment of a fee. It struck me that this sort of thing ought to be exposed, and I en deavored to enter into correspondence with The Knife has been Placed Deep into Prices the 'operator.' She probably, however, suspected the hook, for she did not rise to "A friend got a lady of his acquaintance to write to say that she had an intractable daughter, whom she wished to be 'broken in,' and requesting the advertiser to send pamphlets and letter of advice. The books and the letter were sent, from which the following is taken:

'My first object when a girl is placed with me is to show her, kindly but firmly, that I must be implicitly obeyed. It is always a good plan to rule by moral suasion possible. When that has been fairly tried and fails, then it is positively necessary to use some other means of making the girl

"First I warn of the consequences of re-peated faults; then, when a direct act of disobedience, a lie, or very serious fault shows itself, I tell her that presently I shall punish. Never birch when angry. During the interval she thinks over the fault. I make preparations. These consist in having ready a strong narrow table, straps (waistband with eliding straps, anklets, and (waistband with eliding straps, anklets, and wristlets), cushions, and a good, long, pliable birch rod, telling her to prepare by removing her dress, kinkers, &c., and putting on the dressing gown(bind part before). Then I talk seriously to her, show the nature of the fault, and the need of punishment as a cure. Next I put on the waistband, after having told her that if she submits quietly no one need know; if she struggles I must call in help (girls generally prefer to I must call in help (girls generally prefer to be quiet). Placing her at the end of the table (on which there are cushions to protect the person,) I turn her body over the table, and fasten the straps underneath it. Then I fasten the knees together, wrists the limbs to the legs of the table. This really takes less time to do than to write about. Unfastening the dressing-gown, the orthodox surface is found at the right angle for punishing. Taking the birch, I measure my distance, and, standing at the side, proceed to strike slowly but firmly. By moving gently forward each stroke is differently placed, and six strokes may be enough if well given with full force. If the fault has been such as to need severe correction, then I begin on the other side and work back again. For screems increased strokes must be given. If a girl tries very bard indeed to bear it bravely, then perhaps I give ten to bear it bravely, then perhaps to bear it bravely. It is finished I cover up the part exposed, unfasten the girl, and, finding her probably much subdued, help to resolutions of amendment. "Birching is an extraordinary thing, not an every-day work; therefore care must be taken that the operator has the proper nerve and patience for the operation. Mothers are the proper persons to whip girls; but if they have not the necessary nerve then it is bet ter to appoint a deputy.

"After this serious business is over much steady patience is needed, for a birching is no use whatever if a girl is to be petted again and allowed to do just as she likes. She must be under firm, kind discipline. None of my girls have been more attached to me than those whom I have been obliged to disthan those whom I have been obliged to dis-cipline severely. They have a great respect for those who can master them and who do not taunt them with past misdeeds. One not taunt them with past misdeeds.
